"Phone sex operators also perform a kind of psychoanalysis on the men who call them, through their ability to listen and their predisposition to channel or tell stories. And the taste for fiction keeps permeating the film, as the situation forces Arzu to turn into a kind of Scheherazade of the Arabian Nights: caught up in a spiral, she is forced to tell stories without really finishing them, hoping that fiction will help her save her life..."

OPENING FILM

"A cellist friend of mine had invited me to come and listen to the piece of music she was going to perform as an audition. We were alone in this big white room, and there, beyond music, I could hear her fingers on the fretboard, the hair of the bow on the strings, but also the high standards, the precision, the hours of work. That moment had left a lasting impression on me... So I thought: this is it, in a movie theatre, with high-quality sound, maybe I can allow everyone to experience that."
