While he was being celebrated in New York, Egyptian film director Yehia meets up again with Ginger, his first love. Back then they were 19 years old. The American Dream was the thing of the 20th century. Yehia, the boy from Alexandria and Ginger the American gal were students at the most prestigious Institute of Dramatic Art, in California. They had pledged to love each other forever. But 40 years have passed since then, the world has changed and the American Dream is no longer what it used to be. They are poles apart but not quite though ... for Yehia finds out that he had begotten an American child, a boy. Through a boisterous epic in which heroes love, sing, dance, laugh and cry, Youssef Chahine reconsiders his past and his ambiguous relationship to America which he loved so much.

Julien is a young author whose dream is to be published. Thanks to a subterfuge, he manages to get an appointment with a fearsome publisher, Judith Zahn. She doesn't think Julien is talented but nevertheless finds him to her taste. He lets her seduce him and becomes her lover. One night, out of curiosity, he looks through her belongings. He discovers a fascinating story; the story of Judith's father who used to be a philosopher in the 1970's and died fighting with the guerrilla in Latin America. Julien decides to write a book about it but without telling Judith. When Julien shows her his manuscript, Judith feels robbed and betrayed. She forbids him to publish it and breaks up with him. Julien ignores her and has his book published. Judith feels humiliated and uses a trick to bring him down. She succeeds but does not savour her revenge as she hoped to.

Amin came from Senegal nine years ago to work in France, leaving behind his wife Aïsha and their three children. His work is his life, his friends the men who live with him in the social home. Aïsha sees her husband only once or twice a year, for a week or two, sometimes a month. She accepts this situation as a necessity: the money that Amin sends to Senegal provides for several people. One day, Amin meets Gabrielle and a relationship starts between them. At first, Amin is reserved. There is the language barrier, his modesty. So far, separated from his wife, he has led a life devoted to duty and knew he had to remain vigilant.

After five years in New York, Julie comes back to Annemasse with her baby Nina. They stay with her sister Lou in the apartment she shares with her brother Hugo. Julie finds it difficult to fit back into the town where they grew up. Lou, on the other hand, has found fulfillment with her job as town librarian, her friends, and Seydou, a guy she has just met. Somewhere in between, Hugo is still trying to find his way in life. He works in a factory and plays in a jazz band with some of his co-workers. While he idealizes Julie's life in New York, he envies Lou's everyday contentment. This homecoming leads each of them to open up to one another and to themselves. Although they continue down different paths to find happiness, they discover, during this easy time together, just how close they've remained.

In 1960, during the Algerian civil war, Lieutenant Roque is a French officer worn out by the meandering conflict. Roque and his men have been posted to a small, isolated village. His role is, officially, to pacify the Algerians, and to convince of the « good intentions » of the French presence in the country. But in fact, the main goal is the dismantling and severe repression of the FLN (Algerian undercover army of liberation). He tries hard to live up to his function, torn between the resentful locals and the French soldiers. After the discovery of a notebook, containing confidential information, Roque is confronted with the possible betrayal of some of his men, all of them young recruits of North-African extraction. One of the suspects, Taieb, is Roque's protégé...

When his party's presidential candidate is struck down with an advanced case of cancer just prior to the presidential elections, Michel Dedieu is chosen to replace him. Only weeks before the deciding election, he and his closest advisors have precious little time to prepare for the upcoming TV debate with his opponent. Disdained by the media and held in low esteem by the public, he has to improve his image and develop a convincing argument. He gathers his team around him on his private estate to organize for the telling confrontation. The candidate, by nature fragile and willing to bend to every demand his staff makes upon him, is driven to the edge of exhaustion before he realizes that he's a pawn in a ghastly manipulation, from which he can escape only if he marches to his own drumbeat.

Rahima (23) and Nedim (14) are orphans of the Bosnian war. They live in Sarajevo, a transitional society that has lost its moral compass, including in the way it treats children of the people who were killed fighting for the freedom of their city. After crime-prone adolescent years, Rahima has found comfort in Islam and she hopes her brother will follow in her footsteps. Their life of bare survival becomes even more difficult after Nedim gets into a fistfight at school with the son of a local strongman. This incident triggers a chain of events leading Rahima to the discovery that her young brother leads a double life...

In an investigation of the twilight zone between narrative, history and autobiography, CHRONICLE OF A DISAPPEARANCE transgresses the boundaries of many genres. After living in New York for many years, the Palestinian film maker Elia Suleiman returned to Israel for this film. He used his privileged position as half insider and half outsider to analyze how much the Arab population of Israel is losing its national identity. Through his quasi-aimless roamings we become acquainted with his extended circle of family and friends. The characters lead a marginal existence in an occasionally surreal reality. The director/protagonist moves between the role of character and spectator, mediator and narrator, as the film itself moves between documentary, fiction, reminiscence and present. The film is lucidly structured, funny and ironic.

It is summertime. Lola is twenty. One night she falls asleep in a bus, gets lost and finds herself in an alien world immersed in music. Emir lives there. He is passionate with his brother and fraternal with the woman he loves. Saïda only has Emir and everything is lacking for her, even Emir. Ismaël is as close to this brother as he is to their childhood. To delay their separation, he is willing to invent dangerous games. It is the story of these solitary lives which rub shoulders and are recomposed in the excess of dancing and the pleasure of being in a trance. Due to her desire for Emir, Lola exposes her body - and unintentionally the bodies of the others - to a forgotten warmth. The warmth is painful to their frozen skin but brings them back to life.

On a mission to expose environmental crimes in the rural areas of Northern Argentina, idealistic scientist Valentina travels to the swamp town of Corrientes to test the local water supply. Relying on remote support from her student Nina, who's analyzing the data from her potentially contaminated samples, Valentina embarks on a quest into the dangerous Iberá wetlands. Meanwhile, Valentina's husband Diego and his research partner Simon are on an expedition of their own at the South Pole, but their work is interrupted by the news that something's gone wrong for Valentina. As they rush to the wetlands, hoping they are not too late to keep her safe, evidence of an ecological cover-up comes to light — as does the truth about a love triangle that threatens to break the bond of trust between Diego and Simon.

In Nazareth, under a guise of banal normalcy, the town embraces folly. Under pressure from his failing business, a man takes matters into his own hands and tries to break a chain reaction of petty feuds. He breaks down himself. The man is ES' father. A love story takes place between a Palestinian man living in Jerusalem and a Palestinian woman from Ramallah. The man - ES - shifts between his ailing father and his love life, trying to keep both alive. Because of the political situation, the woman's freedom of movement ends at the Israeli army checkpoint between the two cities. Barred from crossing, the lovers' intimate encounters take place on a deserted lot right beside the checkpoint. The lovers are unable to exempt reality from occupation. They are unable to preserve their intimacy in the face of a siege. A complicity of solemn desire begins to generate violent repercussions and against the odds, their angry hearts counter-attack with spasms of spectacular fantasy.

In the Donbass, a region of Eastern Ukraine, a hybrid war takes place, involving an open armed conflict alongside killings and robberies on a mass scale perpetrated by separatist gangs. In the Donbass, war is called peace, propaganda is uttered as truth and hatred is declared to be love. A journey through the Donbass unfolds as a chain of curious adventures, where the grotesque and drama are as intertwined as life and death. This is not a tale of one region, one country or one political system. It is about a world, lost in post-truth and fake identities. It is about each and every one of us.

Stefano Nardini has been playing music since he was five years old. Moving on from the Music Conservatory to becoming a fairly successful independent punk rock star. At the age of 36 he is taking a look around : he plays in a band with a wild bunch of twenty year olds. He no longer has a real bed to sleep in or a girlfriend. All he has left is a guitar and a car with doors that don't always open... So the time has come for him to find shelter, go back to his family that he has not seen in a long time, and think about his life.

In the beginning was Palestine, just when the story of Younes' life began. Younes fought the English Army at the age of 16 and was still fighting them, an outlaw in his own country, seeking refuge in Lebanon. This was also when the story of his wife Nahila began – she became his bride at the age of 12, she was to breast-feed their first baby during the exhausting walks as she fled with the other villagers towards the North and left behind their burnt-down house. He would visit her in Bab El Chams, a cave in Galilee and after each late-night visit she would bear a new baby and raise it all by herself. This was also the story of Younes' father, Cheikh Ibrahim, the old blind man who knew where the sun stood just by the smell of the trees lining the exile roads. This was also the story of Doctor Khalil, forsaken by his own mother in the confusion of the refugee camps. He was to accommodate Younes who was in a deep coma in Beirut and to lull his pain by telling him about the tragic story of his people. This was the story of the Palestinians, driven forcefully from the camps in Galilee to the camps in Lebanon, enduring fifty years of hardship, hope and love.

Cape Province, South Africa. Four people on an isolated farm in the middle of an arid, red land. A blinding light... Modern times, although the period is uncertain. A story of strength and power, sexual desires and possibly madness. The confinement of these people will oppose Magda and her father, the white and the black race, the masters and the servants. The isolation and the heat become nerve-racking. Frustrations, passions and fears are revealed, and will bring about a greater solitude: a woman's choice to lock herself away from the rest of the world, for the sake of remaining on the land that she loves. Her forefather's land.

As extravagant as it may sound, Zano one day comes up to his lover Naima and suggests that they both set out for Algiers : why don't they cross France and Spain to eventually reach Algeria and discover the land their parents had to flee decades ago? Lost in the perils of immigration, these two children of the Diaspora almost defiantly take to the road with music as their only belonging. Intoxicated with freedom, they let Andalucia's vibrant sensuality engulf them – before they make up their minds to cross the Mediterranean. In an environment of chance meetings, techno rhythms and flamenco music, Zano and Naïma go backwards on the path to exile – hopefully claiming their identities at the end of the journey.

Alice is a 30 year-old sailor, in love but unmarried. While her companion Félix waits for her ashore, she sets off as second mechanic on the Fidelio, an old freighter. On board, she discovers not only that she replaces a recently deceased mechanic, but also that the Captain is none other than her first great love, Gael. In her cabin Alice comes across the diary of the former mechanic, and by reading its content – accounts of technical problems, sexual conquests and lovelorn emotions – she finds, oddly, that they echo her own journey. As the ship calls on various ports, Alice deals with life aboard with an all-male crew and the swings of her romantic feelings, while trying to stay the course.

Thomas is dying. He accepts it. He's chosen to await his death here, in this house by the sea, the house of his childhood. I'm with him. It's still summer. I never realized people could die in the summer. I thought death was something that always happened in winter, that it needed the cold, gray skies and bleakness. But I realize it can also do its deed in the sun, in broad daylight. I think that Thomas will welcome it in the broad daylight. Still, this foreseeable, expected death will bring about a cataclysm. It will affect all of our lives. It will modify them, force them into a new, unexpected direction. It will throw our lives out of whack, without any of us being able to fight it. This death will be the most important event. My brother is dying.

Ada was settled in her life, she was pleased with it, or thought she was. She was one half of a couple who seemed happy, she'd had a child, was even due to get married, and wham... she met Paul... And this Paul was writer to boot, who lived alone with his grown daughter, had an exceedingly intrusive mother, and had the unfortunate idea of losing his father when this story had hardly got off the ground... Life started to gather speed. It was about time.

A passionate heart: Louis Trebor's journey describes a loop, the curve of the Earth as I imagine it. From the Jura Mountains in France to the Swiss border, from Geneva to Pusan in South Korea, and on to the South Seas. Louis Trebor lives in hiding. He feels he is under surveillance. His body is robust, sensual, but his heart will soon give out. He invests everything in a new life with a new heart – a freer, more beautiful life, one without obstacles, regrets or dreams. As he travels south, he throws off the danger that haunts him, eludes a debt he refuses to acquit – even as he seeks to purchase everything.

She's at the door. For years, I've heard her, knocking gently.
Why has it taken me so long to open the door to her?
Am I afraid of the claims she might make? Afraid of some kind of confession?
Am I unwilling to shine a light into the dark corners?
One thing I know: she stands there, alive, stands before me, steers my hand.
I am trying to go beyond where we left off - only yesterday.

Tuscany, 1936. Giovanni Mansani is 30 years old with a good job as a bank clerk, a wife and a little child. His life flows on without worries or anxieties yet without any deep emotional involvement. One day, during one of his daily commuting to Livourna, the place he used to live when he was young and where he just got a new job, he bumps into Maria at the train station. She is brunette. She used to be blond. He doesn't recognise her immediately. He lets her go, dumbfounded. Then the memories come back: the sea, the dunes, the pine trees, his love of youth. Giovanni manages to see her again and gives her a date, on the beach after work. She has been with many other men. It shouldn't be difficult to convince her again. Maria yields to Giovanni's advances. For Giovanni the whole matter is over. But then Maria gives him another date.

Because he had published the twelve Danish cartoons that had triggered the wrath of Muslims worldwide, Philippe Val, the editor of Charlie Hebdo, a French satirical newspaper, was cited to court by the Great Mosque of Paris, the World Muslim League and the Union of Islamic Organizations of France. Daniel Leconte has been covering this extraordinary trial in real time, aiming at deciphering the international political, ideological and media-related stakes with the key participants. The film features lawyers, witnesses, the media, editorial conferences, demonstrations of support... as well as the stances of intellectuals and politicians, the reactions of the prosecutors and of Muslim countries... A reflection on Islam, on the press, on the state of the public opinion in French society, but also an endeavor to answer the challenges that fundamentalism poses to all democracies.

Groups of children, aged between 8 and 10, gathered to play at being doctors, farmers, policemen or teachers, acting out for us the working lives of their parents. As a result, professions and behaviour were subjected to the searching gaze of these close yet not so naive observers. They “portray” their perception of the professional life. At this age, the parents’ world is as a reference point for children in understanding others and everything around them. Because of this, the father and mother’s profession has a great deal of importance. The film’s goal is to lead us into these worlds and the film will show the way in which children replicate their parents’ gestures. By choosing what they want to show us, they will reveal what they perceive.

Toilets, loos, lavatories, bogs and johns were places of refuge when I was young. Along with the end of the garden. I thought I had secrets, thoughts and things others must not know. Otherwise danger. Confident solitude, well-being, required a door you could lock. And still today. I became a filmmaker. Toilets were made to be filmed. Straightforward and functional, endlessly different, the size, the angles, the sounds, everything about them begged to be caught and canned. For one of my films, I asked the Railway Company to transport the components of a genuine train lavatory into the studio. I've rarely been near a toilet, public or private, without locking myself in with my camera. In the hope that some invisible connection between spirit of place and my sense of the day will germinate. In these places of rest, as Americans call them, I often remember Pascal's insistence that «The Maker of Angels is also a Maker of Beasts», a phrase capable of infinite interpretation, according to taste, that helps shift my camera down, up, across... My mother's death, not long past, exercises a transformation. The shots burst beyond childhood. What was before is gone – and with it, perhaps, my fondness for loos. Henceforth, they shall be nothing more than places of ease, places of return – to dust.

If I get along well with someone, if I'm attracted to what that person does, then I have an annoying tendency to desire to film that person. I get rejected or not. It sometimes happens that one has a change of heart after saying yes. The shoot can last years or simply an afternoon. So I stock a lot of films that I edit, that I abandon or eventually take up again. And then, simple pleasure in the middle of disorder, four films come together merely to form one. Bruce arrives in Rome for a one-year stay at the Villa Medici. His brother, a writer, is dead. His girlfriend is leaving him. As the days pass, he finds himself cut off from the outside world and his usual bearings as he becomes acquainted with the imposing setting of the magnificent, solemn palace and its disturbing grounds. He meets Matteo, a young Roman trainee at the Villa's administrative department. Matteo gradually worms his way into Bruce's life. Unsettled and disturbed by facets of Matteo's character that resemble his brother's, Bruce allows himself to be drawn into an unusual and poorly defined relationship, a cruel initiation made up of great expectations and erotic games. When Bruce tries to turn back, it's too late.

French writer, Luca Morandi was born in Italy. He is forty years old and finds himself at a crossroads in his life: he doesn't know where to turn, France, his adopted homeland where he was raised? Or Italy, the country of his birth, perfect, wonderful and ideal, like a child's dream? Today, Luca faces a crisis: he's neither Italian, nor French. He's nothing. His father, a renowned cosmetic surgeon in Turin, dies suddenly. Luca has to return to Italy with his sister Isabella for the funeral. But the burial, this bereavement that should help him grow-up, becomes a complete nightmare: widows, secret mistresses, new brothers and sisters, enough debts to drive you crazy, and a new and different "berlusconised" Italy without memory. Luca rediscovers his childhood country and his own life through his adult eyes. Everything seems to have lost its flavour, except maybe for Lilla, his childhood sweetheart he randomly comes across in a stadium. Luca finds it impossible to mourn, he's constantly haunted by this father's love of life, women, and red convertible cars. From hate to love, resentment to forgiveness, Luca will redefine the rules and the meaning of his own identity and his existence. He will reconcile the France within him with his native Italy. On both sides of the Alps, la vita is dolce and beautiful.

Sicily, first half of the 18th century. Marianna is deaf and dumb. She is locked in her own world full of sounds, rich in emotions, tensions, intelligence. She can feel every vibration of both people and things in the world around her. She is protected by her grand-mother and enfolded in the love of her desperate and taciturn mother. At the age of 13, she is forced to marry the old Duke Pietro. At the age of 16, she has already borne three children. As a young woman, her French tutor teaches her sign language, the pleasure of literature and the fire of the new philosophers and the new ideas. This education enables Marianna to become emancipated through culture and self-respect. Only counting on herself, Marianna will manage to break what seemed an inevitable destiny of repression and submission. All alone she discovers the terrible truth that has been covered up since her childhood.

A glance at humanity living in contemporary Buenos Aires, a profoundly contradictory city where drama blends with comedy, friendship with enmity, abuse with solidarity, the desire to leave with the desire to stay. A fragmented story made of uncertainties and decisions to be taken, with two women seeking for a better life amidst economic and sentimental difficulties, a man finding strength and confidence in love, a couple who wants a child by all and even the less orthodox means, a man believing he can change his life by emigrating to Ibiza... While time goes by, men and women differing in age, class and lifestyle, try (mientras tanto) to find the best possible road, be it inside or outside the labyrinth of Buenos Aires.

Snow White is 20 years old and, like all blossoming young women, pledged to live happily ever through a princely marriage. What's more, her betrothal is imminent. But what should be the ending is just a beginning, because Snow White isn't happy at all. Haunted by the image of a mother as horrifically beautiful and cruel as in any fairytale, and in spite of her gentle Prince's attentiveness, Snow White proves to be capricious and "frustrated." A trip back to Snow White's castle, initiated by the Prince's parents to ask for her hand, brings the Princess back into her mother's clutches. But the Queen may not be exactly as Snow White would like us to imagine... so as to better challenge her and enlist us in her cause...

In Chile, at three thousand metres altitude, astronomers from all over the world gather together in the Atacama desert to observe the stars. The desert sky is so translucent that it allows them to see right to the boundaries of the universe. It is also a place where the harsh heat of the sun keeps human remains intact: those of the mummies, explorers and miners. But also the remains of the dictatorship's political prisoners. Whilst the astronomers examine the most distant galaxies in search of probable extraterrestrial life, at the foot of the observatories a group of women are digging through the desert soil in search of their disappeared relatives...

Each week, in three Parisian public hospitals, a psychologist and two doctors are treating men and women who are suffering from work related problems. An assembly line worker, an agency manager, a state enrolled nurse and a shop manageress... In turn, during some unique interviews, these four people tell us about their problems. The three medical specialists listen to them and gradually establish the relationship that exists between the individual distress of their patients and the new forms of work practises. Through the intimacy, the intensity and the truthfulness of these ordinary dramas, filmed in a real life situation, the film questions the way in which suffering in the world of work has become an everyday feature of life. With a cinematographic approach, Ils ne mouraient pas tous mais tous étaient frappés unveils and gives perspective to an invisible and yet silent reality that usually takes place behind closed doors: the untold work related suffering.

1983 - Alicia, the mother of an adopted 5-year-old girl, teaches history in a Buenos Aires high school. Both in her profession and in her private life she has always accepted the « official version », until one day when the regime's façade and that of its surroundings begin to fall to pieces around her. In the crevices of this enormous lie Alicia dares to suspect that Gabi, the girl she has adopted, might be the daughter of a « desaparecido ». It is then that she begins a painful and inexorable journey towards truth - a journey in which she might lose everything. All of these individual adventures are part of a dramatic larger one: Argentina itself, a society which, bordering the abyss, tries to reconstruct its future, examining its wounds, recognizing itself in its victims and their executioners.

The opera, Pelléas et Mélisande, first performed in Paris in 1852, had never been staged in Russia. In June 2007, director Olivier Py and conductor Marc Minkowski produced Claude Debussy's opera in Moscow for the first time, with a Franco-Russian cast. To spectators unfamiliar with Pelléas et Mélisande, Debussy, or even opera, we wanted to create a sensory, imaginary space that they could make their own, without partiality or preconceived notions. « We never see but the reverse side of fate, even of our own », the old King Arkel sings. On screen, the shimmering world of the theatre becomes an allegorical cave of the world, peopled with Claude Debussy, Maurice Maeterlinck, Olivier Py, Marc Minkowski, as well as young Russian singers, technicians, extras, an entire brotherhood of beings who are "mysterious like everyone.

The sister about whom I was told nothing, or nearly nothing, and of whom my parents had oddly never kept a single photograph. It was to make up for the missing images that I decided to make this film. Thinking that I would simply chronicle a forgotten life, in fact I opened up the hidden door to a past that I was unaware of, to the subconscious memory that lies inside each of us and who makes us what we are.”

These portraits are encounters I wanted to be kept from oblivion, even if it is only while you are watching them. They are women who work, who have children, and who, at the same time, keep their independence of mind. I shot 24 portraits of 13 minutes each. I have chosen this short running time for several reasons: not becoming a bother, escape tv adds cuts, shoot the movie quickly, in one pace and without too many scratches. I am not a documentaries maker. I am more like a faces, hands and things lover. To show reality is not my goal. “Reality” is just a word, just like its twin sister « fiction », which I practice as well, but with a different delight.

(Alain Cavalier)

PS: Use them with moderation. The ideal would be to watch these portraits by rows of three.

FRENCH & ENGLISH ORIGINAL VERSION - ROMANTIC COMEDY - COLOR

During a party somewhere in Paris, an apprentice filmmaker, Boris, and a young executive, Marilyne, play at being a loving couple when they've only just met. They end up really falling in love. Five years later... Marilyne, accompanied by Boris and their two kids, goes to Ibiza on a business trip. Just as Boris, tired of being a househusband, is about to leave her, Marilyne takes off on a lover's spree. Five years later... Marilyne reappears in the depths of the Pyrenees as the leader of a group of American women on a "personal growth" tour. She learns that the man who is to introduce them to the mysteries of coqs de Bruyère mating rituals is none other than Boris. In the same way that, five years earlier, they played at being intimate when they'd only just met, Marilyne and Boris will now play at being strangers when they know each other... For the very best.

As a great artist who brooked no compromise, Rembrandt van Rijn experienced fame and fortune, bankruptcy and personal tragedy. Famous by the time he was thirty, he married the beautiful Saskia and, within ten years, lost her, just as his fortunes were beginning to decline. The fashion of the day was all bright colours and a light touch. Rembrandt pursued a different vein, working heavy shadows into thick whorls of oil. Indifferent to propriety, he took his women from among his servants and found his friends outside polite society. Until one day, the great and the good of Amsterdam set out to punish the man whose genius they had once so loudly proclaimed.

Through her awkward though deliberate writings, requiring every ounce of her strength, we encounter her daily struggle to survive. The thankless and bitter battle is punctuated by a determination against a mortal illness and the distress it engenders. Yet her writings never stoop to despair or indulge in self-pity. An inspiring document revealing a young and talented woman whose time on earth is too short, but who remains determined to face the inevitable with dignity. Full of pride and fear, she faces her fate and her solitude.

Maité is married to Vincent who has just been sentenced to seven years in prison. The only intimacy left to them lies in the prison's visiting rooms. Twice a week, she picks up his laundry, washes it, irons it, and brings it back to him, performing this ritual assiduously and meticulously. One day a young man approaches her outside the prison. His name is Jean. He loiters around her and offers her a ride. She hesitates at first, but agrees to his proposition. He becomes her lover. Their moments of pleasure are set in specific places (a field, a car) but remain stolen moments. He will not cross the threshold of her home. Eventually Maité learns that Jean is actually a warden in the prison, who has, moreover, offered her husband his protection. Caught between desire and guilt, pleasure and duty, she finds herself trapped in a three-player game, the rules of which none of them really knows.

« Snow does not fall to cover the hill, but for every beast to leave its trail. » Bosnia, 1997. Four women, two old ladies, four girls, an old man and a boy live in the war torn village of Slavno. Their families have been killed and their bodies never found. Living with the presence of their missing loved ones, the women have created a very special world, one in which the absent are nevertheless present. Trying to keep themselves alive by keeping all memories and their dreams, they have made a dreamland out of their village without even being aware of it. But still, they are trying to fight for existence. Slavno is remote from the rest of the world, but the first snow brings the threat of total isolation and risk for life in the village. As it gets closer, Alma, a stubborn young woman in her late twenties, believes they can not only survive but even prosper by selling plum jam and other fruit and vegetable products on a deserted road. Two businessmen unexpectedly visit Slavno demanding the residents to leave the village offering money in return. The villagers face a dilemma: should they accept the offer that could save their lives but destroy their souls? A sudden storm traps the businessmen in Slavno, forcing them to face a problem bigger than anything they expected - the truth!

On the one hand, there's the desert eating away at the land. The endless dry season, the lack of water. On the other there's the threat of war. The village well has run dry. The livestock is dying. Trusting their instinct, most of the villagers leave and head south. Rahne, the only literate one, decides to head east with his three children and Mouna, his wife. A few sheep, some goats and Chamelle, a dromedary, are their only riches. A tale of exodus, quest, hope and fatality. Rahne and his family travel across hostile lands under a lethal sun, walking endlessly onwards and frequently crossing paths with death. But « Sounds of sand » is also a parable about determination and eternity that takes us in the footsteps of Shasha, a nomad child full of the joys of life, whose tenacity and strength will conquer her father's love.

Raoul is 20, he lives alone in a Paris attic room. He's a student in Art History working on his master's degree. However, he finds it hard to concentrate on the task in hand as, for several months now, he has been obsessed by a single idea: he wants to be kissed. Therefore, he spends hours in pavement cafés watching women walk by and wanders for days on end through the streets of Paris hoping for an unlikely encounter. So, why doesn't he ever go up to the girls whom he often sees alone, reading on a bench or writing at a café table ? He generally waits until they leave or until other, less timid young men approach them to say the words that he doesn't dare to say and make the gestures that he'll never make. Perhaps he'd like to be noticed ; but the thing is, Raoul is neither handsome nor ugly. There's nothing exceptional about him and he's just a « young man who wants to be kissed »... This film is his story.

Gathered together on a country estate is a group of relations and old acquaintances. Uncle Vanya, his niece Sonya, and the local doctor, Astrov, find their lives disturbed and threatened by the arrival of a beautiful young woman and her older husband... « Vanya » is a unique filmed production of Anton Chekhov's « Uncle Vanya », as adapted by David Mamet. A film by Louis Malle of Andre Gregory's acclaimed stage production which came to life in 1990, it provides an unprecedented forum for a unique collaboration of two master directors, each in their own medium: Louis Malle and Andre Gregory in film and stage respectively. Framed as a rehearsal under the direction of Andre Gregory, we enter the slightly altered world of Chekhov's « Uncle Vanya ».

At twenty, Laurence is always ready to fall in love. Unfortunately, she scares off her suitors with her eagerness. As a result, they either cheat on her or dump her! When her mother dies, Laurence decides to find Renée, her grandmother, whom she hasn't seen since she was a child. Renée isn't particularly keen on seeing her granddaughter again... Her naivety annoys her immensely. To prove to Laurence that true love doesn't exist and that men will continually fool her, Renée offers to train her in her art of living. An art that consists of a few basic rules: seduce a rich man, marry him as soon as possible, quickly get rid of him (discreetly but permanently), pocket his life insurance premium, use it selfishly and... start all over again. Laurence allows her unusual grandmother to train her. But it's a risky game... both for this fiendish couple and for the men who cross their path...

Tunis, 1942. Nour and Myriam, 16, have been friends since childhood. They share the same house in a modest neighbourhood where Jews and Muslims live in harmony. Each one secretly desires the other girl’s life: while Nour regrets that she doesn’t go to school like her friend, Myriam dreams of love. She is envious of Nour’s engagement to her cousin Khaled, a sort of fantasy of the charming Arabian prince that they both share. Unfortunately, Khaled cannot find work. The engagement lingers and the prospect of a carnal union grows more distant. In November 1942, the German army enters Tunis. Pursuing the policies of the Vichy regime, the Nazis impose a heavy fine on the Jewish community. Tita, Myriam’s mother, no longer has the right to work. Crippled with debts, she decides to marry her daughter to a rich doctor. Myriam sees her dreams of love suddenly fade away...

After the death of her daughter, Rita returns to the African country of her childhood to investigate a past mystery: the death of Yvone Kane, a former political activist and guerrilla fighter. In that country, where progress has been built on the ruins of a violent past, Rita reunites with her ageing mother, Sara, a tough, solitary woman who has lived there for many years. As Sara spends her last days trying to make sense of her past actions, Rita's search for the truth surrounding the death of Yvone gets her embroiled in a land scarred by its History and haunted by ghosts of war and evil. But every path she follows seems to lead her towards the revelation that redemption and forgetting are impossible...
